New Zoo Opens Soon

Old Los Angeles Zoo To Close on Tuesday

The Griffith Park zoo, visited by millions during the five decades since it opened in 1912, will close its gates to the public for the last time at noon Tuesday.

"After that time, until the fine new Los Angeles Zoo opens Oct. 17, we hope people will visit Children's Zoo in Griffith Park," William Frederickson Jr., general manager of the Los Angeles City Recreation and Parks Department, said.

The Children's Zoo is the only part of the new zoo now open. Frederickson explained closing of the Griffith Park Zoo at this time was necessary so its more than 2,000 animals could be moved to the new 110-acre Los Angeles Zoo located about a mile north of the old zoo.

"IT TAKES time to move so many animals and it also takes animals time to adjust to new exhibit areas," he said.

Los Angeles City Zoos have a history going back to 1885, according to Dr. Wesley A. Young, zoo director. Records show that Los Angeles probably had the first city-operated zoo on the West Coast. No other major city in California had a zoo until 1916, he said.

"By that time," Dr. Young said, "Los Angeles had had a city zoo for 31 years. While the old Griffith Park Zoo was not the first in Los Angeles, it still existed before any other major California city had such a facility."

Peninsula Resident Appointed

Mrs. Hare, president of the Palos Verdes Peninsula Democratic Club, is also chairman of the "28th Club," fund-raising organization for the 28th Congressional District Democratic Council.

She is the wife of Jeff Hare, 1962 Democratic candidate for Assembly in the 46th District. Hare presently is chairman of the 28th Congressional District Democratic Council.

zoo when a city facility was opened in Lincoln Park, then known as Eastlake Park, in 1885. This zoo had mostly cats and a few hay animals.

The small city facility was directly across the street from a private zoo, which was formed primarily to provide animals for motion picture work. The private zoo overshadowed the Los Angeles Zoo, so the city moved its facility to Griffith Park in 1912.

A Zoological Society of private citizens was supposed to be formed and raise $5,000 to match another $5,000 the City Council was to provide to buy animals for the new Griffith Park Zoo. The Society, however, was never able to raise its share and the City Council would give only $2,000 toward the cost of moving the animals from Lincoln Park and to construct housing.

SOME OF the bear dens built then are still in use at the Griffith Park Zoo. Welded wire encircling groups of trees was used to make stockades. Wolves, hay animals, monkeys and even big cats were kept in such makeshift enclosures when the Zoo first opened.

Veterans To Get ID Bracelets

An emergency medical identification bracelet or necklace is now being issued to veterans with serious medical problems, the Veterans Administration has announced. The identification is issued on the prescription of the attending VA physician.

Object of the new identification is to provide information to medical personnel for treatment of the veteran should he become unconscious.

Such information will include special needs of the patients, such as heart pacemaker, or the patient's reaction to certain drugs. Diabetes and epilepsy also will be identified.

The VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery supply service is making initial distribution of the bracelets and necklaces to all VA hospitals and clinics. They will be furnished without regard to service-connected disability.

1914 resulted in local unemployment, and one make-work project for these jobless men was construction of the big flight cage still in use at Griffith Park.

WORLD WAR I brought a crisis to the Los Angeles Zoo, when a patriotic City Council determined to support the food conservation measures, instituted during that period, refused to approve purchase of beef meat for feeding of animals. Horse meat was fed instead and the zoo lost almost its entire group of big cats and other meat-eating animals.

In the 1930's during another depression, the Zoo was further enlarged when the Works Progress Administration built roads in the Zoo as well as more bear grottos and other types of enclosures.

The new Los Angeles Zoo will open to the public at noon Monday, Oct. 17.
